New Resources

Selected Fund for Workforce Equity Organizations

Workforce Matters is a national network of grantmakers working together to improve offerings and outcomes for incarcerated learners. In September, members of Ascendium's Education Philanthropy team visited Sing Sing facility in order to strengthen program alignment, facilitate resource sharing and improve offerings and outcomes for incarcerated learners. This grant supports Rhodes College in Tennessee in facilitating collaboration across three postsecondary institutions that each operate programs in one prison. This grant supports National Student Clearinghouse Research Center (NSC – Research Center) to pioneer a new measure of income and incorporate analysis by students' income background in its signature annual publications. This grant supports National Skills Coalition in helping states implement policy and redesign recruitment and admissions processes to be more learner friendly. This grant supports Per Scholas in scaling their technology workforce training and professional development model to tens of thousands more learners and hundreds of employers. This grant supports Year Up in launching a new Google Career Certificates training program in two locations — Austin, Texas, and Seattle, Washington — as a complement to its traditional one-year, tuition-free training model. Year Up will pilot the Google Career Certificates training, combined with a shared outcomes complement to its traditional one-year, tuition-free training model.
